Persistence: writes data to a remote process;
Fingerprint: Requests information about the kernel debugger. Reads the name of the active computer and its configuration. This allows you to get an idea of what the process is seeing. Fingerprint can be used to find out where the request is coming from. Fingerprint is also used to see if there is another process with the same name on the system. This is useful if you need to find out which applications might be calling another process. Two Fingerprint modes can be used.
