Adobe Lightroom Adobe Lightroom is a photo management, presentation, and publishing system designed for image creation and editing. While Lightroom is the Adobe Creative Suite program in which Photoshop is built, it's only the beginning of Lightroom's editing toolkit. It includes tools for image processing and editing, such as exposure and contrast enhancements, correcting bad settings, retouching skin and hair, reducing noise, and correcting color. You get access to a library of images with one-click searching, easy image-to-image and image-to-print transitions, and image previews. You may find it best to give Lightroom a try before learning how to use Photoshop. If you like Lightroom but want to learn the Photoshop tricks, try the free Lightroom 4 tutorial on the Creative Suite 5.0 DVD-ROM.

However, Photoshop can be expensive and isn't always needed, depending on the type of photography you do. For hobbyists and amateur photographers, Photoshop is a great tool, but for the professional, there are many other tools that are better suited for their needs. In many ways, Photoshop has become a more complex tool, which will take you much longer to complete a project. The same resources that make Photoshop so great also make it more difficult to use. For example, if you accidentally delete an important picture, you can't just use Photoshop's Undo function. Your only option is to use the Edit > Undo command. With Photoshop you'll have many more options and shortcuts in the menus, which can be useful but also overwhelming. However, there are Photoshop alternatives that are designed to make it easier for amateur photographers, hobbyists and other users to make their projects easier and to save them time. These are some of the best Photoshop alternatives. What's Cookin' in the Kitchen: Serving up a guest As I've slowly been recovering from one of those cruises on which, when we finally got back to the country, I turned on the television and saw an ominous map of the country, informing me that snow was falling in the northwest, snow was falling in the southeast, snow was falling in the north, and snow was falling in the south. Snow was falling in places that were not known for snow. There were snowfall totals in the mid-20s. This was back in the early '80s. So I called my aunt in New York City, told her what was happening, and asked her to call the kids and let them know how strange and funny it was to live in a place where it could snow, how wonderful to have a snowman in the lawn, how upsetting to go to a store that suddenly can't be reached because there is snow falling, how not to notice that fall of snow but rather to notice with delight that the lawn looks lovely and white with snowflakes. My aunt is a smart, worldly, funny lady, and she thought it was a hoot, and she put it all together for me and notified the kids. So when we got back home, I was always full of this sense of excitement and how-dare-it-be-that-we-live-in-a-place-where-we-can-have-snow. I was like a kid. I didn't understand why it was such a big deal, but it was, and I loved it. But I think it helped prepare me. My favorite hometown was Helen, N.C. I grew up in Newark, N.J., where my parents, who were farmers before they were farmers, raised chickens and hogs and had a still. When it was time to get away from my hometown, they moved to Helen, where my dad taught high school. My dad grew up in Virginia and became a factory worker and then decided to go to college, and then became a country schoolteacher. I think that's always been attractive to him, that idea of helping other people. I think he always had that strong belief in community. And there was something about Helen, N.C., that was very special. It was still rural, but it had a sense of community, a sense of optimism and a sense of possibility. There were close family ties.

Cerebral venous sinus thrombosis in an infant with congenital hypercoagulopathy. Cerebral venous sinus thrombosis (CVST) is a life-threatening condition. There is an increased prevalence of hypercoagulable states in children. We report a case of a 9-month-old infant with congenital hypercoagulopathy who presented with new-onset seizures and a focal lesion detected on magnetic resonance imaging (MRI). She was treated with steroids and discharged with oral anticoagulation. She subsequently presented with altered mental status. Repeat MRI showed marked interval change to a large thrombus in the straight sinus causing venous infarction. Pathologic analysis revealed marked fibrin deposition. We hypothesize that her hypercoagulable state triggered an underlying cerebral venous thrombus that led to venous infarction. A coagulopathy resulting in thrombus formation is a rare cause of CVST. The presentation of both primary and metastatic SCC of the skin should be included in the differential diagnosis of cutaneous tumors with a metastatic propensity. The skin is the most common site of metastasis for malignancies originating from deeper sites of the body. This is due to the superficial nature of the skin and to the rich vascular supply. We report two cases of cutaneous metastases from squamous cell carcinoma, one in the trachea and the other in the orbita. Welcome to my Stitch Together Stitch is a series of simple stitches that can be combined to make shapes. This is one of my favorite stitch patterns because I made it in a weekend with my two-year old son. With my son, I am trying to teach him new things that he can pass onto his children. I think this stitch pattern is something I can pass down to him. It was a lot of fun to create, too. Supplies Instructions Note: This only works with white yarn, so that is what I used for both examples.  1. With white yarn, hold the pom pom seed stitch and insert a needle through the bottom loop, then twist the yarn like you would a normal knotted stitch and pull through to create a loop. 2. Insert a second needle through the bottom loop and bring it to the bottom loop of the first stitch. 3. Bring the next needle up
